The Rooster

The rooster is a lusty bird; in all the land his voice is heard, a proud and haughty bird by heck who flaps his wings and curves his neck. From east to west, from perch to pole his morning bugle echoes roll, arousing men from snoring sleep and maidens from their beauty sleep. He hunts for worms with main and might, and finding one, with uge delight, to what his harem's appetite, he calls his wives with thrill and hum, then, humor great but manners hum, he eats it up before they come. Now whether Red or Plymouth Rock one half is he of all the flock, and chickens mostly favor dad in qualities both good and bad. But when the hatching season's over we must restrain this gallant rover, must shut him up in lonely state and keep the layers celibate. Their eggs will thus repay out toil when fertile ones would quickly spoil. The man who'd be a fresh egg booster must segregate that old he rooster.

PAUL CARROLL DIES FROM INFECTED TOOTH

Infection from a drawn tooth which later developed into tetanus resulting in the death of Paul Carroll 27 years old, of Bedford, Monday morning at the Western Maryland Hospital. He was taken to the hospital Cumberland, Sunday in a serious condition. Before he died, Carroll called for paper and pencil and endeavored in his delirium to write a letter to his people, making distribution of some of his personal effects. It is learned that his parents live in Connecticut, and that they were advised of his death and the body is being held at the mortuary in Cumberland pending their arrival.

The dead man was head waiter at Fort Bedford Inn and had been employed in that capacity since the season opened. He was of massive frame and build and physically built in proportion.

It is learned that recently Carroll had a "crowned" tooth which gave him trouble, and upon the advice of a dentist the decayed tooth was extracted. Infection later developed and he was taken to Cumberland for treatment.

Mr. Carroll was a singer. He sang in the Catholic Church here and in the Richelieu Theatre frequently.

DAIRY HERDS UNDER STATE CARE SHOW BIG INCREASE IN MILK PRODUCTION

The supervision maintained by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, over the dairy herds at the State hospitals and other state institutions is bearing excellent results.

Under the supervision of Director T. E. Munce, the herds at these institutions are inspected, tested for tuberculosis and the health of the cows generally safeguarded.

Dr. H. W. Mitchell, superintendent of the State Hospital at Warren, in a letter to Dr. Munce, announced that the cows at the hospital, for the year ending June 30, averaged 10,500 pounds of milk each, an increase of 1,500 pounds per cow per year.

The same methods that are employed at the State institutions may readily be applied by any herd owner in the State and the results obtained at the Warren hospitals are evidence of the fact that such supervision pays big dividends.

TO MEMBERS OF THE SEWING CIRCLE

Here is some more information about the pending Republican tariff bill.

Cotton Fabrics

Under the Democratic Underwood-Simmons law the average duty is 22.6 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 40 per cent. This includes all fabrics such as ginghams, calicoes, organdies and similar materials, used exclusively for women and children.

Cotton Hosiery

Under the Underwood-Simmons laws 30 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 68 per cent. If the latter becomes effective it will be no longer possible to buy children's cotton hose for 25 cents.

Cotton Corsets

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 30 per cent; under the pending Republican bill; 64 per cent.

Silks

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 60 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 90 per cent. On silk pongees the proposed rates average as high as 230 per cent. On Japanese Habuti silks (China silk or wash silk) the proposed rates are practically double the rates of the Underwood-Simmons law.

Laces

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 60 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 90 per cent.

Leather Gloves

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 14 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 37 1/2 per cent. Under the proposed rate it will be impossible to import ladies' kid gloves. On a sixteen button kid glove the proposed rate amounts to 83 cents per pair. Under the Underwood-Simmons law 41 cents.

Cotton Gloves

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 35 per cent; under the pending Republican bill over 100 per cent. On a sixteen-inch button glove costing $4 per dozen the duty under the Underwood-Simmons laws would be $1.40 per dozen; under the pending Republican bill $3 per dozen for gloves up to eleven inches long and 10 cents extra for every inch over eleven inches.

Wool Fabrics

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 35 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 74 per cent. The proposed rate is designated to exclude the importation of a good class of woolen cloth.

Buttons

Under the Underwood-Simmons law 35 per cent; under the pending Republican bill, 96 per cent. Remember the increased percentage is the minimum increase you will have to pay.

It is estimated that under the pending Republican bill the women of the United States will pay $1,000,000,000 more for clothing than they pay now under the Democratic Underwood-Simmons law.

The pending Tariff bill is one of the issues between the Democratic and Republican party. It is a direct issue with women. The Democratic party is opposed to it. Where do you stand?

Committee.

MRS. FRANK SHEARER IS HIT BY AUTOMOBILE

Mrs. Frank Shearer, of The Willows, was struck by an automobile driven by Mrs. George W. Derrick, of Everett, last Saturday evening and received a broken leg. Mrs. Shearer was driving home the cows along the pike when three autos came along. Mrs. Derrick's car being one. Mrs. Derrick was driving at a moderate rate as she is a very careful driver and the other two cars were coming at a terrific speed. It is thought that Mrs. Shearer in order to make the cows secure forgot her own safety and stepped against Mrs. Derrick's car which threw her fracturing her leg.

We are pleased to note that Mrs. Shearer, while suffering, is getting along nicely and that she doesn't fault Mrs. Derrick for the accident. It was really the fault of the speeders in the other two cars whom Mrs. Shearer feared and whom she tried to escape and in that effort got in the way of Mrs. Derrick's car.

"People should know that when stock is in the road that they should slow up, but some of these frantic speeders haven't sense enough."

DEACON People are much more MORRILL tolerant of the religious MUSES: views of others than they were a generation or two ago. The pessimist will say that it is easy to be tolerant in matters which are no longer of vital interest, but we may hope that part of the change at least has a better reason

WISCONSIN REPUBLICANS PAN HARDING

Milwaukee, July 17.—United States Senator LaFollette, opening his campaign for renomination in a keynote speech here tonight, attacked predatory wealth, asserting it had reached undreamed proportions and that it dominated the Disarmament Conference, the tariff and other important Republican legislation. He was not a pessimist, he said, and believed a way out could be found.

He claimed monopolistic control of industry, through over capitalization, was the greatest cause of present "industrial disease." To overcome monopoly, he proposed the Government taking back control of national resources and maintaining a strict leasing system, to give all manufacturers an equal opportunity. He predicted that the Government would not have to fix prices under this system.

Speaking from a prepared address, the Senator did not go into the question of prohibition.

Agriculture is almost prostrate, industry stewed with wrecks, the merchant fleet idle, costing millions daily even while idle and about to be sold to private individuals "for a few cents on the dollars," the Senator stated.

Railroads, he charged, have taken a billion and a half from the public treasury, but the burden of excessive rates has not been lifted. Labor is idle now as never before and in no line are wages sufficient for more than a "decent living standard," he said.

Slums Administration Hard

The Senator said the greatest achievement of the Republican Administration in revenue legislation has been the repeal of the excess profits tax on corporations, which, he estimated saved "corporations and Trusts $450,000,000 taxes annually." He criticized excess appropriations for the army and navy as advocated by "the Administration."

LaFollette declared that Teapot Dome, Wyoming, an oil reservoir of national importance, has been removed from protection of wise legislation and given to the Standard Oil Company. The Four-Power treaty was denounced as un-American.

The Disarmament Congress, he said, was designed to protect financial interests, not lives. Even greater plans are now under way, he said, to plunder the American people, namely the present tariff bill, the ship subsidy bill and an alleged Administration plan to postpone the bonus.

If, he said Congress was bent on service, in their interest of the whole people and not special interest the Fordney-McCumber bill would not get ten votes in the Senate, that its rates are substantially higher than those of the Payne-Aldrich tariff that drove the Republicans from power.

He advocated an excess profits tax for raising money for the soldiers' bonus.

MOTHER OF 20 BAKES 30 LOAVES OF BREAD AT TIME, SEWS TOO

Connellsville, July 19.—Frank Yoder, employed on the construction gang laying the foundation for the new Methodist Episcopal Church here is the father of 20 children, 15 of whom still gather around the family table. Mr. Yoder, aged 45 years, is a resident of Plank road, Somerset county. His wife is aged 40 years. The eldest child, a son, is aged 25 years and the youngest a girl, is aged 4 months.

One of the chief duties of Mrs. Yoder is the baking of 30 loaves of bread every other day. In addition she and the children farm seven acres of land, keep 14 hogs and two cows. Mrs. Yoder sews all her children's clothes and also does the family cobbling.

Four of the children are dead, and one is married. Included in the family are three sets of twins. Mr. Yoder said today that he purchased more than 10 pounds of pork chops for the Sunday dinner, his week-end visits being his only opportunity to be with the family.

BAND CONCERT AT CHARLESVILLE

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Pittsburgh.—Dr. F. L. McGraw and Mrs. Josephine Wakeman, of Bradock, were killed at Port Perry when the physician's automobile was struck by a Baltimore and Ohio railroad trolley. They were on a mission of mercy when the accident occurred.

Bloomersburg.—Rolling off a truck when he thought it would be hit by a Bloomersburg and Sullivan train here, Walter Wayne fell directly on the track in front of the train, but had presence of mind to roll off the truck before he was struck.

State College.—The wheat yield on 10,000 acres in Pennsylvania is expected to show an increase of 50,000 bushels this summer as the direct result of the wheat seed "Pennsylvania 44" developed at the college a few years ago. This number of acres of the new variety of wheat are being harvested, and the average increased yield will be five bushels an acre. If more than 1,000,000 acres that are sown with wheat in this state were sown entirely with "Pennsylvania 44" it is estimated that the increase in value of the state's wheat crop would exceed $5,000,000.

Rethlehem.—Many delegates from the District Board of Health Association, comprising Northampton, Berks, Monroe, Lehigh and Carbon counties, met here. Dr. H. D. Heller of Stroudsburg, was chosen president; J. J. McCafferty, of Allentown, secretary, and Harry Doell, of Reading, treasurer. Mayor Yeakel welcomed the delegates and addresses and papers on health topics were delivered by Colonel Edward Martin, head of the state health department; Dr. W. C. Miller, chief of the bureau of health education; Colonel John D. McLean, deputy health commissioner; Dr. J. B. McCreary, assistant chief of medical inspection, and Dr. C. P. Stahl, of Lancaster.

Pottsville.—Charles Cole, a 5-year-old boy, was drowned at the Mount Carbon dam and James Welsh, a companion, was resuscitated with difficulty after being rescued. It was not until Welsh was revived, it was learned that Cole was drowned.

Harrisburg.—The York Railways company was refused permission to construct a grade crossing in Red Lion by the public service commission on the ground that it would be dangerous. The commission completed its first July session, clearing its docket of more than 100 applications for jitney certificates and similar matters.

York.—A census of manufacturing plants and employment agencies in York showed that unemployment here has been reduced to the smallest scale since the industrial depression was felt. The last six weeks are said to have brought the most substantial improvement in the situation.

Seranton.—Mrs. Robert McGree, of South Seranton, was seriously hurt when she fell from a tiled porch while escaping from her home, which was being disturbed by a mine settling. A policeman rescued the woman and she was unconscious when taken to a hospital. The house was badly damaged by the cave-in.

Harrisburg.—The dog license fund of the agriculture department, which, under the 1921 act has charge of enforcement, contains $317,000. More than $13,000 has been paid out for damages in the first five months of the year and some money has been expended for enforcement. Under the old law the county commissioners enforced the law and the money went to the counties. Now all of the money except that collected in Philadelphia and Allegheny goes into the special fund. Secretary Rasmussen announces that 295,253 dogs have been licensed this year as compared to 291,459 last year.

Harrisburg.—More automobile licenses for unlicensed persons were issued in the first half of 1922 than for a similar period in 1921, according to statistics issued by the state highway department. Thus far 525 have been issued, 116 being car owners and 55 paid drivers. Last year 500 "one-arm" licenses were issued. Eighty-three of the 50 licenses revoked this year to date were owing to drivers being intoxicated it was said.

Seranton.—The Hotel Clifton, a garage and a barn located on the shore of Lake Winola, thirteen miles west of here, were destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $100,000. The hotel was the largest at the lake, had 250 rooms and was a two-story frame building. Joseph O'Malley, of Seranton, was the proprietor. The fire was discovered on the second floor and spread so rapidly that no time was allowed for escape. The fire was caused by a gas leak in the kitchen.

Waynesburg.—A car well producing about 15,000,000 cubic feet daily has been brought in from the 50 foot sand on the Hawkins farm near here.

Hazleton.—Hazleton Castle, No. 72 Knights of the Golden Eagle, was host to delegations from lodges at Mauch Chunk, Mahanoy City, Ringtown, Kutztown, Chambersburg, and other places. This place was appointed as a deputy commander of the lodge.

Pittsburgh.—Blood, seeping through floor, led police to an apartment in McKee Place here. They broke down the door and found the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Smith, who, it is said, formerly resided in Steubenville, O. After investigating, the police said they believed Smith killed his wife after a struggle and then shot himself.

Harrisburg.—Effect of the coal strike has been shown in the reduction of compensation claims, according to Commissioner of Labor and Industry Connelley, and there will be fewer cases for argument before the board on its July hearings in the anthracite regions. In the first half of 1922 compensation agreements aggregating $5,782,658 were made, 66,257 accident reports having been received by the compensation bureau. Of this number 835 were fatal, 68 permanent disability and the remainder the usual run of industrial accidents. The reports show 305 eyes, 76 legs and 91 feet lost. The compensation for each eye lost averaged $1443.

Uniontown.—Within three days after he was arrested on a charge of assaulting Catherine Smith, aged 16, of Dawson, Raymond Hazlett was committed to the Western Penitentiary to serve from 26 to 30 years. Arrested on the afternoon of July 4, he made a confession the same day, went before a justice of the peace on July 5 and was held for court. Within an hour he was arraigned before Judge Van Swearingen, his confession read and sentence imposed. One day later he had begun his long term in the penitentiary.

Williamsport.—The regular summer pollution of the west branch of the Susquehanna by manufacturing plants west of this city occurred. Hundreds of small fish with which nature had restocked the river, following the deadly dose of poison dumped into the waters last fall came to the surface dead for a distance of ten miles from Williamsport. Bathers were driven from the water by its poisonous contents and complaints were made to the state fish commission.

Lansdale.—When a number of American flags were offered at auction, Charles W. McGinnis, commander of the William E. Hare Post, American Legion, halted the sale. The federal law prohibits you from selling the American flag in this manner, he told the auctioneer, and, although several bids had been made on the flags, they were withdrawn from sale. "I have sold many American flags in my time," the auctioneer said, "but this is the first time I have heard of such a law."

Harrisburg.—The battle of Pennsylvania has started to battle with garlic. Presence of wild garlic in wheat is costing farmers in the southern and eastern wheat growing counties hundreds of dollars a year because its presence gives it a low grade and opportunities to develop wheat growing have been materially hampered by patches of garlic among the grain. Dr. E. M. Gress, the state botanist, who has been making a study of means of eradicating the pest in Chester, Lancaster and other southeastern wheat growing counties, has completed a series of experiments in the vicinity of West Chester, and says the means to get rid of garlic is by stopping wheat growing and using crops which require cultivation.

Darville.—John Cooper, aged 60, veteran watchman at the Bloom street crossing of the Reading railway, received injuries which resulted in his death when he was struck by a light engine. He was walking on the track when the engine, which was running at a high speed, was about to pass him. He was taken to the hospital, where his death occurred several days later.

TESTING FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Reports Show That Eradication Work Can Be Carried on Without Destroying Industry.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
That testing cattle for tuberculosis and the cleaning up of infected herds are having a permanent effect in reducing the extent of the disease is shown conclusively by figures recently collected by the United States Department of Agriculture from inspectors in charge of the eradication work in various parts of the country. The inspectors were asked to supply figures on the results of three or more tests on badly diseased herds, those that had not less than 10 per cent of reactors on the first test. The first test on more than 58,000 cattle in these had herds showed that 26 per cent had tuberculosis. Another test six months later on the same herds, from which the reactors had been removed, showed only 6.9 per cent of the disease. By another six months the percentage had gone down to 2.8. A fourth test on more than 25,000 of these cattle showed only 1.8 per cent of tuberculosis.

The reports from which these figures were taken show that under normal conditions herds very badly diseased may be established as relatively free in a short time. They also show that eradication work can be carried on without destroying the cattle industry.

If Any of these Cows Have Tuberculosis the Hogs Following Them Are Certain to Get the Disease.

thought. Erratic results were obtained or a very few of the 182 herds tested the list of this class containing test-than 100. Out of the 126,608 herds under observation December 1, 1921, there were only a very few that had not shown satisfactory improvement as a result of testing.

PREVENT ANIMAL DISEASES

By Taking Proper Precautionary Measures Many Ailments Could Be Thwarted.

Many of the diseases suffered by live stock on the farm could be prevented by proper precautionary measures, according to Dr. Robert Graham of the University of Illinois. Nearly all diseases to which animals succumb are preventable, he declares, and the surest way to keep your animals healthy is to adopt such health measures as will prevent them from getting sick.

The continuous use of old feed lots year after year without regard to rotation is one way to spread disease. Each class of live stock has its own peculiar ailments, which may be largely eliminated by the rotation of feed lots.

Keep yourself posted as to what diseases are prevalent in your neighborhood, and then do everything in your power to keep your own live stock from getting them.

FEEDS FOR WORKING HORSES

Mature Animals Require Starchy or Carbonaceous Rations to Furnish Needed Fuel.

The character of feed required by horses that are working is quite different from that required by young growing animals or dairy cows. Mature horses need starchy or carbonaceous feeds to furnish fuel rather than large amounts of protein. For this reason corn and timothy hay may be fed more liberally than such protein feeds as wheat and alfalfa. Oats furnish most of the protein needed, and a good rule for feeding a horse doing moderate work is given as one and one-fourth pounds of hay and three-fourths pound of grain to each hundred pounds of weight, but horses at hard work are sometimes given as much as one and one-fourth pounds of grain.

PASTURE IS PIG ESSENTIAL

Rape, Alfalfa and Clover Are Bone and Muscle Building Feeds and Cheapen Gains.

Pasture is of course vital to the best development of pigs. Rape, alfalfa or clover should be available to the spring pigs, as these forages contain much bone and muscle-building feed, and they help to cheaper gains.

WRITE TO THESE MEN.

The chief defects, or places where waste is apparent in the conduct of the business of the government, that I have pointed out in these articles, have been, first, the excessive proportion of the government income that went for military expenditures; second, the chaotic condition and lack of adequate supervision and control of expenditures, which have been in part remedied by the introduction of the budget system; and third, the haphazard organization of the government departments and the unorganized condition that prevailed in government employment.

The remedy for two of these conditions I have treated briefly in the two immediately preceding articles. I come now to the matter of reorganization of the departments and the reclassification of government employees. A beginning has been made on both of these matters.

A joint committee of the two houses of congress, with Walter F. Brown as chairman, is studying the whole question of organization of the government and the function of the various departments and bureaus and independent establishments. I cannot too strongly advise you to keep yourself in contact with the work that joint committee is doing.

I have given you the names of the members of the committee in another article but I will repeat them here. They are Senators Smoot of Utah, Wadsworth of New York and Harrison of Mississippi; Representatives Reavis of Nebraska, Temple of Pennsylvania and Moore of Virginia. Write to any of them or to Mr. Brown, the chairman of the committee, who represents the President, with headquarters in the house office building here at Washington.

This is the third or fourth attempt that has been made to effect a general reorganization of the conduct of the business of the executive departments. They have all failed through lack of interest. There was lack of public interest, and consequently lack of interest in congress.

This joint committee is at work now. It is collecting facts. It is finding out the actual condition. It is studying the departments. Presently it will make a report to congress. If you will show an active, insistent interest in the work that it is doing, congress will take action. If you do not show this interest, there is every chance in the world that no action will be taken, and that things will remain much as ever.

Hundreds of special interests are clamoring for the attention of congress. All of them are organized. Most of them keep representatives here at Washington. They present to individual members of congress in a hundred skillful, shrewd, subtle ways arguments to support the legislation they are seeking to advance. It would take two or three columns of this newspaper merely to print a list of the organizations and associations that are here to keep congress mindful of their interests.

In this great clamor the common public interest is likely to be submerged. In fact, too often it has been submerged. This matter of economies and reorganizing the business of the government and taking up the tedious details of administration is a dull business. It has been neglected and put off time after time because of a lack of public interest and driving force behind it.

If you will supply this driving force now and display a sustained interest, you can at least put the business of government of the United States on an efficient basis. Congress has been negligent because you have been negligent, but now at last the thing has run along so far that something must be done about it.

Used Insects to Fight Insects.

Control of destructive insects by the introduction of their natural enemies has become an important technique during the last generation, writes Paul Popenoe in Science. But if competent observers are to be trusted, the southern Arabs employed the same method more than 160 years ago in the culture of the date palm.

In his "Relation d'un Voyage dans l'Yemen," P. E. Botta says:

"I was able to verify the singular fact previously observed by Forskal, that the date palm in Yemen are attacked by a species of ant which would cause them to perish if each year the growers did not bring from the mountains and fasten in the tops of the palm branches of a tree that I did not recognize, which contains the nests of another species of ant which destroys that of the date palm."

PEAT MAY BECOME THE MODERN FUEL

ENGINEERS ARE SAID TO HAVE FOUND METHOD TO UTILIZE
IT WHEN RAW OR WET.

IT PRODUCES POWER CHEAPLY

Water Content Called an Asset, Not a Liability—Country Has Vast Quantities of Peat, Chiefly in North Central States.

By JAMES P. HORNADAY

Washington.—The United States geological survey, the bureau of mines and the bureau of standards are watching with keen interest the development of a process by persons not connected with the government service for utilizing raw or wet peat for power purposes. The process, it is asserted, has been developed to a point where success is reasonably assured. The undertaking is to convert the moisture content and the combustible content of peat into steam and gas by means of a pressure engine.

Reports have recently been made to the three government bureaus above mentioned that engineers appear to have discovered: (1) That peat of a high water content can be burned indefinitely as a fuel and used for all the power processes of a manufacturing plant; (2) that water in the peat is an asset and not a liability; (3) that 30 cents worth of peat will produce as much power as a ton of bituminous coal; (4) that the process would recover a large per cent of by-products, including coke, ammonia, light and heavy oils and tar for dye base; (5) that other carbonaceous fuels might be employed the same as peat.

The government experts in the geological survey, the bureau of mines and the bureau of standards say that if the process that is being developed turns out successfully, the effect will be to turn to commercial uses the immense peat beds which are to be found in some twenty states. The largest of these beds, according to the geological survey, are in Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Michigan and Indiana. The lake beds in northern Indiana are nearly all composed of peat.

Vast Quantities of Peat.

It is estimated by the bureau of mines that the peat available in the United States is approximately 12,000,000,000 tons, and that about half of this amount is in Minnesota. It has also been estimated that there are between two and three billion tons of peat available in the state of Wisconsin. The total swamp area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is about 139,855 square miles. The geological survey estimates that 8 per cent of this area has peat beds of good quality. The depth of peat over this vast area is assumed to average at least nine feet, giving 200 tons of dry fuel per acre for each foot of depth.

The geological survey has for many years been calling attention to the enormous supply of peat—a supply that thus far has practically remained untouched—and has all along maintained that the time would come when this supply would be utilized as a substitute for coal and fuel oil. From time to time the survey has asked the congress for money with which to experiment with the use of wet peat as well as dry peat, but the legislative body has never shown any interest in these requests, and so it remained for engineers in their private capacities to take up the work.

Development Will Be Rapid.

The fact that most of the peat contains about 80 per cent of water in its natural state has, the government experts say, held back the development of the peat fields; and if, as seems probable, engineers are successfully developing a process under which the water in the peat can be converted into steam while the dry peat can be converted into gas, and the two powers utilized together, it will not be a great while until development of peat bodies will be undertaken on a large scale.

The Wisconsin geological survey has compiled some interesting statistics showing the value of the peat deposits of the country on the basis of full development including by-products: Peat coke, 3,508,800,000 tons, value $28,005,800,000; illuminating oils, 257,800,000, $9,748,700,000; lubricating oils, 90,200,000, $4,474,200,000; Paraffin wax, 38,700,000, $3,497,800,000; phenol, 167,500,000, $66,345,100,000; asphalt, 35,800,000, $524,000,000; wood alcohol, 43,800,000, $7,844,000,000; acetic acid 50,700,000, ammonium sulphate, 39,900,000, $2,777,400,000; and combustible gases, 738,400,000, $6,501,300,000.

Obviously, if a substitute for the fuels now available, cheaper, more widely distributed and more readily available, could be discovered, the face of industrial life would be transformed. For years chemists and engineers have labored to increase the efficiency of electricity and steam and to cheapen the processes whereby they are produced. A still cheaper commodity than coal or oil is water, but often water cannot be employed for power unless it is impounded, and the impounding is very expensive. Is there at hand, lying under the eyes and noses and feet of mankind, a fuel still better adapted for power purposes than coal, oil or water?

Better Crop Reporting Planned.

Important changes in the crop reporting system of the Department of Agriculture are about to be made as a result of a detailed examination of the methods by a committee of the American Statistical Association. While pronouncing the methods now followed to be fundamentally sound and commending the bureau of markets and crop estimates for the precautions taken to prevent slips, the three outstanding statisticians made a few recommendations, some of which have already been introduced.

The "crop blunder of 1921" was responsible for the investigation of the crop reporting system which was ordered last winter by the secretary of agriculture. The fact that the committee of three statisticians, Carroll W. Doren of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and former president of the American Statistical Institute; Prof. Warren M. Persons of Harvard University, and Prof. Wilfred I. King, economist for the National Bureau of Economic Research, made a thorough examination of the methods of gathering and compiling the crop reports has just been made public. It was learned that the three statisticians made two visits to Washington, during which time they spent several days for the purpose of passing upon the system now in effect.

The three most important reforms suggested are:

1. The strengthening of the field offices.
2. The designation of a competent, high class statistician to serve at Washington, whose sole duty would be to do research work in the examination and analysis of the data from which the estimates are evolved.
3. The proper correlating of weather and other factors with the yield from crops.

Present Methods Revised.

At the Department of Agriculture it was stated that the committee had reported favorably upon the methods employed by the government reporting system in determining the acreage under cultivation and the probable yield. The system was said to be "thoroughly sound" and the bureau was generally commended. However, the statisticians, after personally reviewing the data upon which the preliminary estimates of the condition of the crop were based, suggested that there should be additional clerical assistance and a lifting of certain duties from the shoulders of those who are charged with making the broader surveys.

It was suggested that the field offices should be strengthened by affording additional help for the statisticians, who are responsible for the estimates as to the yield in their respective states. It was pointed out that the one clerical assistant did not seem to provide adequate help in handling the stream of reports and other information which flows into the office.

It was recommended that there should be at least one experienced statistician, who might devote his entire time to the supervision of these crop reports without being required to undertake any administrative work. Mr. Estabrook stated that the committee expressed the belief that a more substantial travel allowance should be afforded to permit the field statisticians to get first-hand information from observing the growing crops.

Financial Deficiency Overcome.

On July 1 an appropriation of $90,000 became available for the development of the live stock reporting system. While this money will be spent to insure a more dependable estimate of live stock, it will be of some indirect aid to the crop reporting service. With these new funds each field statistician will have two clerical assistants instead of one. The same field statistician will be utilized, however. Sufficient funds have been provided to make it possible for the field agents to travel over the territory in their states, it was added, so that this deficiency, which was assigned as the principal cause for the 1921 crop blunder, has been overcome.

It is planned to bring one or more of the most expert field statisticians to Washington to serve in the central office. The department will insist that they spend the entire time in developing the technique, or the finer points, of the system. There is to be at least one research statistician, who will not be concerned with anything other than the examination and analysis of the data.

It is recognized, the head of the crop reporting system said, that not enough has been done to work out what the effect of weather is upon crop yields. A technical statistician is to be assigned to the task of correlating the effect of this and other factors upon the results that ultimately obtain. This is a precise study, according to the official view, and offers perhaps the most interesting possibilities of the various refinements suggested.

Eskimo Dwells in Sweltering Heat.

The explorer Stefansson spent five years in the Arctic mapping out territory, collecting valuable material and studying the condition of the inhabitants. He remarks that the Eskimos unspoiled by civilization live a great part of their lives in a climate whose temperature is from 80 to 90 degrees Fahrenheit. That is what a thermometer in one of their snow houses registers; and when they go into the open they are clad in two layers of fur that must maintain the body heat at a tropical point; in short, indoors or out, the Eskimo and the Sicilian live in the same climate. Among the northern Indian tribes, who live in wigwams and are poorly clothed, the age of maturity is quite as high as among the north European whites. Thus Stefansson accounts for the apparent exception to established theory.

MORE GOOD THINGS

Give the children a treat by making them some good home-made candy.

The following will be easy to make and pleasant to eat:

Pacific Sea Foam.—Take three cupfuls of light brown sugar, one cupful of water, one-fourth teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Cook to the soft ball stage and pour over the well-beaten white of an egg, beat until cool, adding three-fourths of a cupful of walnuts and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Drop by teaspoonfuls on a buttered sheet or pour into a well buttered pan.

Chinatown Almond Squares.—Boil together two cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of water eight minutes, then add one-half teaspoonful of vinegar and boil until the syrup is brittle when dropped in cold water. Brown one-half pound of almonds slightly in a buttered pan; now pour over the almonds the hot syrup, which has been flavored with one-half teaspoonful or less of almond extract. Press the candy well down evenly in the pan, using the cut side of half a lemon. Cut before it hardens.

Baked Corn With Clams.—Mix one can of minced clams, one cupful of canned corn, one cupful of milk, and one egg, with one teaspoonful of salt, a speck of onion, salt, pepper and paprika. Place in a baking dish and dot with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Bake one-half hour. Fresh corn may be used.

Potato and Herring Pie.—Peel six potatoes, slice very thin, season with white pepper and mix with one cupful of chopped celery and one-fourth of a scraped onion. Put into a baking dish, in which two tablespoonfuls of butter have been melted and toss the vegetables with it. Chop two salted herrings which have been soaked in cold water for an hour or two, mix with the vegetables and pour over the whole one cupful of milk or water. Cover with a baking powder biscuit crust and bake three-quarters of an hour in a moderate oven. Brush over the crust with melted butter before it is quite baked.

CHAIRMAN HULL'S VITAL QUESTION: "WHY RE-ELECT FAILURE?"

"Why should the American people elect another Republican Congress next November? Why, in other words should any employer continue in his service an employee who has proven utterly incompetent, unscrupulous, unreliable and unsuitable to render efficient service?"

This vital question asked by Hon. Cordell Hull, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, in a recent speech in the State of Maine, is one that each voter must must answer, and if he votes intelligently the answer must be that there is no reason for the re-election of the present Republican Congress. All intelligent voters know that this Republican Congress and the one preceding it have been failures, and Republican voters have learned that fact from the editorial columns of Republican newspapers, which are agreed that this is "the worst Congress in twenty years." They have also learned it from Republican spokesmen like Secretary Weeks who said that "this Congress has reached the lowest ebb in the history of the country."

The Republican plan of campaign for 1922, as conducted by the reactionaries in control of the party, is a repetition of the campaign of 1920 when through misrepresentation and unlimited promises the leaders of the party deliberately set out to fool the people.

This query by Chairman Hull therefore puts the duty of voters squarely and plainly before them: "Why should the American farmer, laborer and honest business man, with the awful experiences of the Republican industrial panic of 1921 and 1922, allow the same crowd of Republican politicians, who fooled them during the campaign of 1920 by unnumerable promises of good business conditions, to fool them a second time in 1922 by new promises made in the same bad faith? Why should this class of voters now be in a humor even to listen to long lists of false excuses, absurd explanations and attempted alibies, such as these same Republican politicians are planning to offer during this year as the only means of securing votes at the ballot box?"

It will greatly aid voters to answer this question as it should be answered by contrasting their prosperous condition under a Democratic administration with the distressful conditions that prevail under this Republican administration. Unquestionably this is what they are doing, Chairman Hull pays this just compliment to the intelligence of voters in both parties.

"The American people are now realizing and appreciating, as never before, the broad, constructive and wholesome achievements of the recent Democratic administration. They now realize that the fundamentals of both administration and foreign policies of the recent Democratic administration were eternally sound and are being vindicated every month. They are now realizing that the utter aimlessness, inaction, incompetency and helplessness of the government at Washington since March 4, 1921, offers the chief responsibility for the sad business and economic plight the American people have experienced during 1921 and 1922. They are now realizing that the great affairs of our National government cannot be conducted on a low standard of public morals and political honesty such as is set by the Newberrys, the Daughertys, the Nat Goldsteins, and other personal or official and political associates of those in charge of the government. Practically the entire Republican membership of this Congress are candidates for re-election. Their own party press and party spokesmen admit they have been failures. Why re-elect failures and make matters worse than they are?"

PRESIDENT HARDING'S DREAM

I would welcome the day when I can come back to stay with you permanently. It is a very fine thing to be President of the United States and it is a good thing to keep on thinking it, because when you wake up from your dream you will find it a very different thing—Marion (O.) special dispatch to New York World, July 24, 1922.

The speaker quoted is Warren G. Harding informally telling his auditors how it feels to be President. The reader will not fail to observe a note of weariness in this remark. It indicates an indisposition to face and to overcome the problems of the great office of President. It is the plaint of a man who loves the broad primrose path of leisure but who dreads the rocky, thorny one of toil and achievement. It is the utterance of a man already tired of his job.

Warren Harding has been President of the United States one year and four months. During his honeymoon year he seemed to have enjoyed himself to the utmost, but now evidently the roseate view is beginning to dissolve, the primroses to lose their brightest hue and the paint to wear off the red wagon. He confesses that he will welcome the day when he can go back to Marion and stay there permanently. Well, one-third of his term has expired. Thirty-two months is but a short while; it will soon roll 'round.

HISTORY REBUKES CHAIRMAN MCCORMICK FOR SLUR ON WOMEN CANDIDATES.

Not only women, but men, will take issue with Senator Medill McCormick, Chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, in his recent interview to the effect that women are not fitted to hold important offices, such as Senators, Congressmen and the like, but that persons might vote for them for little jobs like school directors or town councilmen, etc.

Senator McCormick has read history to little purpose of he has failed to note the importance of women in the conduct of government and of political affairs generally. Has the Senator forgotten that it was Isabella of Spain whose progressivism was about the discovery of America without which Mr. McCormick would not now be a Senator of the United States? He has lived in the latter part of the Victorian era and ought to be measurably familiar with the kind of ruler Victoria Guelp made for Great Britain. Holland has prospered as well under Wilhelmina as the average state in this country has prospered under Republican rule; even the little duchy of Luxembourg under Charlotte is doing better at present time than most of the European states under male rulers.

Has the Senator no recollection of Russia under the reign of the Catherines, or Egypt under Cleopatra or England under Queen Bess? A man wise enough to be Senator must revere the wisdom of Solomon, which will naturally call to mind the historic visit of the Queen of Sheba and her understanding and appreciation of the methods of the wisest man of all times.

One might go to a biographical encyclopedia and fill this paper with the names and achievements of women rulers of states, of women wise beyond men, like Hypatia, of woman who have exerted a influence over public affairs by influencing the "weaker sex" who were the nominal heads of government, but it ought to be necessary to convict the average person of intelligence that Senator McCormick's discrimination against women, and especially in his capacity as Chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, is wholly unjust and has no basis in reason or in fact. The superior women exists just as the superior man, and with equal suffrage, she will make herself equally felt in the affairs of government. In any event, she is entitled to an equal opportunity.

BENEFITS NOBODY NOBODY BUT THE RICH

Washington, July—The defection of Republican Senators over the Fordney-McCumber Tariff bill, following the general defection of the Republican press is alarming and administration and the Republican national organization. Like the man who was swinging the tiger by the tail, Republican Senators are hollering for someone to help them let go. Senators like La Follette of Wisconsin, for instance would like to recommit the bill and have the schedules revised downward and are freely predicting Republican defeat this fall unless this is done. Other Republican Senators favor postponing the passage of the Tariff bill until after the election and still others would like to throw it out the window and the Ship Subsidy bill with it.

Speaking by-and-large the Fordney-McCumber Tariff bill is becoming about as popular as a case of smallpox. The Democratic Senators analyzed it and vivisected it so thoroughly that all of the infamies and iniquities of the schedules so far discussed have been exposed and made plain to the general public. These exposures show that the extortionate profiteering rates of the bill are not comparably to anything, shot of burglary reaction against the bill has so affected some Republican Senators that they are beginning to declare their intention to vote against it unless certain schedules are largely reduced.

Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin, recently said, "If rates like this are to be written in the bill in any great number I shall be relieved of any obligation to support it."

Senator Norris of Nebraska, had previously declared, "We cannot defend a bill built on these principles. You may get the votes to put it through, but I warn you now that we will be the sufferers."

The latest insurgent against the bill is Senator Edge of New Jersey, who said:

"The passage of this hard and fast tariff bill without opportunity for certain elasticity of rates might prove a national calamity. As much as I realize, in many cases, the necessity for higher schedules for our farm and factory products, I feel that I would fail in my duty if I finally supported a measure which, while it unquestionably provides much need protection, still might result in a further diminution of our trade with the world, so necessary to the prosperity of every class citizen-ship."

Even Senator McCumber, in charge of the bill, and other Republican Senators like Cummins of Iowa, Freligh of New Jersey and Townsend of Michigan, openly admit that this is a time to pass a tariff bill. But this is not the reason why Republican leaders and the Republican administration are trying to find a way to give the bill until after the election. They fear defeat at the polls and this fear is the only consideration that would prevent them from carrying out their contract with the special privilege class to mulier the great pauper through profiteering tariff rates.

The Tariff bill which was one of Mr. Harding's administration assets, has become one of its greatest liabilities.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR BABY WELL

Care of the Baby's Skin in the Summer Time

Baby's skin needs particular care and attention in the summer time. During the hot weather, the baby is subject to so called heat rashes. Another name for heat rashes is prickly heat. This shows itself as small red spots, which usually come first in the neck, chest and back. This rash is really caused by excessive sweating due to the heat and the irritation of moist clothing on the skin.

Besides this, a rash known as chafing may occur wherever two skin surfaces are in contact. It is present on the most part between the thighs, under the arms, and in fat babies, in folds of the neck.

Prickly heat may be easily prevented by keeping your baby dressed as coolly as possible. Soft muslin or linen should be placed next to the skin instead of wool garments.

If the weather is very hot, the baby may be kept naked, except for his napkin.

Frequent sponging of the body with water containing a little bicarbonate of soda, not alone helps to prevent the heat rash, but makes for the general comfort of the baby. Where chafing occurs, the parts should be carefully sponged off, thoroughly dried, and freely powdered with a good baby talcum powder. Stearate of zinc powder may be used.

Should the affected parts be raw, zinc ointment should be applied and the opposing skin surfaces separated by a piece of very soft muslin or linen.

Care must be taken not to have your baby breathe in any of the powder used on his body. A serious form of bronchitis may develop should he do so. It is dangerous for him to play with the powder box.

As the rash of measles and scarlet fever may look at times like a heat rash, it is always best to consult your physician should you have any doubt as to the character of the rash on your baby.

ANT POISON

Ants in gardens and lawns can be eradicated by the use of a slow poison. Such a poison is taken back into the nest by the ants and fed to the young so that both old and young are killed. The most convenient poison recommended by the Bureau of Plant Industry, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture is tartar emetic used at the rate of one part to twenty parts of honey or a syrup. A good syrup can be made by dissolving five pounds of sugar in a pint and a half of water. Place this poison where children, animals and birds will not reach it but is convenient for the ants. Should the ants be in the house and be the grease loving kinds substitute lard or other grease for the honey.

Rev. Caldwell of the Presbyterian Church will preach a special sermon in 7 A. M. E. Church next Sunday at 3 o'clock. All are invited.

MIGRATING RACES SEEM TO BE DOOMED

"The Northwestern Europeans who made this Nation what it is undoubtedly are dying out, just as the northern invading Germanic nations died out in Italy and Spain at the level of Philadelphia," writes Dr. Austin O'Malley of Philadelphia in America. "The death rate of the Irish here is more than double what it is in Ireland—it is 16.5 in Ireland, but 34 here. The German death rate at home in 1912 was 13.4 in New York in 1915 it was 24.3. The English and Welsh combined rate at home was 13.3 in New York it 18.8. The Southern European death rate reverses the order: The Italian death-rate at home was 14.2 in New York it is 8.9; the Austro-Hungarian rate in Europe was 26.9 in New York it is only 7; the Russian Jews' death-rate in Europe before the war was 30.9, here it is down to 6.4, and these are carefully arranged rates, not dependent on the age of the immigrants.

"All this evidently means that the Northwestern Europeans die out in America, but the Southern and South eastern Europeans are increasing astonishingly. Twenty-five years ago the writer studied a group of fifty Irish families living in Pennsylvania after they had been in this country fifty years, and then, instead of advancing numerically or even holding their crown, they had retrogressed 86 per cent.

"The final result in the United States with the descendants of our European immigrants undoubtedly will be that the Southern and South eastern European races will survive here and come to the top or drag all down to themselves, according to one point of view, while the Nordic races decay under the attrition of our Southern sun, as they always decayed in Southern Europe after migration like the exodus which brought these people to America.

to show it. Only yesterday, when she was crying and hugging me, and telling me how awful it was that her little girl should have to suffer, too, I told her not to worry a bit about me; that I wasn't suffering at all. I liked it. It was ever so much more exciting to have two homes instead of one. But she only cried all the more, and sobbed, "Oh, my baby, my baby!"—so nothing I could say seemed to do one mite of good.

But I meant it, and I told the truth. I am excited. And I can't help wondering how it's all going to be at Father's. Oh, of course, I know it won't be so much fun, and I'll have to be "Mary," and all that; but it'll be something different, and I always did like different things. Besides, there's Father's love story to watch. Maybe he didn't wait a year. Anyhow, if he did find somebody I'm sure he wouldn't be so willing to wait as Mother would. You know Nurse Sarah said Father never wanted to wait for anything. That's why he married Mother so quick, in the first place. But if there is somebody, of course I'll find out when I'm there. So that'll be interesting. And, anyway, there'd be the girls. I shall have them.

I'll close now, and make this the end of the chapter. It'll be Andersonville next time.

CHAPTER V

When I Am Mary.

Andersonville.

Well, here I am. I've been here two days now, and I guess I'd better write down what's happened so far, before I forget it.

First, about my leaving Boston. Poor, dear Mother did take on dreadfully, and I thought she just wouldn't let me go. She went with me to the junction where I had to change, and asked the conductor to look out for me. (As if I needed that—a young lady like me! I'm fourteen now. I had a birthday last week.)

But I thought at the last she just wouldn't let me go, she clung to me so, and begged me to forgive her for all she'd brought upon me; and said it was a cruel, cruel shame, when there were children, and people ought to stop and think and remember, and be willing to stand anything. And then, in the next breath, she'd beg me not to forget her, and not to love Father better than I did her. (As if there was any danger of that!) And to write to her every few minutes.

Then the conductor cried, "All aboard!" and the bell rang, and she had to go and leave me. But the last I saw of her she was waving her hand cheerily, and smiling the kind of a smile that's worse than crying right out loud. Mother's always like that. No matter how bad she feels, at the last minute she comes up bright and smiling, and just as brave as can be.

I had a wonderful trip to Andersonville. Everybody was very kind to me, and there were lovely things to see out of the window. The conductor came in and spoke to me several times.

But the way you would look after a child, but the way a gentleman would tend to a lady. I liked him very much.

There was a young gentleman in the seat in front, too, who was very nice. He loaned me a magazine, and bought some candy for me; but I didn't see much more of him, for the second time the conductor came in he told me he'd found a nice seat back in the car on the shady side. He noticed the sun came in where I sat, he said. (I hadn't noticed it specially.) But he picked up my bag and magazine—but I guess he forgot the candy box the nice young gentleman in front had just put on my window-sill, for when I got into my new seat the candy wasn't anywhere; and of course I didn't like to go back for it. But the conductor was very nice and kind, and came in twice again to see if I liked my new seat; and of course I said I did. It was very nice and shady, and there was a lady and a baby in the next seat, and I played with the baby quite a lot.

It was heaps of fun to be grown up and travelling alone! I sat back in my seat and wondered and wondered what the next six months were going to be like. And I wondered, too, if I'd forgotten how to be "Mary."

"Dear me! How shall I ever remember not to run and skip and laugh and sing, or ask questions, or do anything that Marie wants to do?" I thought to myself. And I wondered if Aunt Jane would meet me, and what she would be like. She came once when I was a little girl, Mother said; but I didn't remember her.

At last we got to Andersonville. John was there with the horses, and Aunt Jane, too. Of course I knew she must be Aunt Jane, because she was with John. The conductor was awfully nice and polite, and didn't leave me till he'd seen me safe in the hands of Aunt Jane and John. Then he went back to his train, and the next minute it had whizzed out of the station, and I was alone with the beginning of my next six months.

The first beginning was a nice smile, and a "Glad to see ye home, Miss," from John, as he touched his hat, and the next was a "How do you do, Mary?" from Aunt Jane. And I knew right off that first minute that I wasn't going to like Aunt Jane—just the way she said that "Mary," and the way she looked me over from head to foot.

Aunt Jane is tall and thin, and wears black—not the pretty, stylish black, but the "I-don't-care" rusty black—and a stiff white collar. Her eyes are the kind that says, "I'm surprised at you!" all the time, and her mouth is the kind that never shows any teeth when it smiles, and doesn't smile much, anyway. Her hair is some gray, and doesn't kink or curl anywhere; and I knew right off the first minute she looked at me that she didn't like mine, 'cause it did curl.

I was pretty sure she didn't like my clothes, either. I've since found out she didn't—but more of that anon. (I just love that word "anon.") And I just knew she disapproved of my hat. But she didn't say anything—lot in words—and after we'd attended to my trunk, we went along to the carriage and got in. My stars! I didn't suppose horses could go so slow. Why, we were ages just going a block. You see I'd forgotten; and without thinking I spoke right out.

"My! Horses are slow, aren't they?" cried. "You see, Grandma has an auto, and—"

"Mary!"—just like that she interrupted—Aunt Jane did. (Funny how old folks can do what they won't let you do. Now if I'd interrupted anybody like that!) "You may as well understand at once," went on Aunt Jane, "that we are not interested in your grandfather's auto, or his house, or anything that is his." (I felt as if I was hearing the catechism in church!) "And that the less reference you make to your life in Boston the better we shall be pleased. As I said before, we are not interested. Besides, while under your father's roof, it would seem to me very poor taste, indeed, for you to make constant reference to things you may have been doing while not under his roof. The situation is deplorable enough, however you take it, without making it positively unbearable. You will remember, Mary?"

Mary said, "Yes, Aunt Jane," very polite and proper; but I can tell you that inside of Mary, Marie was just boiling.

Unbearable, indeed! We didn't say anything more all the way home. Naturally, I was not going to, after that speech; and Aunt Jane said nothing. So silence reigned supreme.

Then we got home. Things looked quite natural, only there was a new maid in the kitchen, and Nurse Sarah wasn't there. Father wasn't there, either. And, just as I suspected, 'twas a star that was to blame, only this time the star was the moon—an eclipse; and he'd gone somewhere out west so he could see it better.

He isn't coming back till next week; and when I think how he made me come on the first day, so as to get in the whole six months, when all the time he did not care enough about it to be here himself, I'm just mad—I mean, the righteously indignant kind of mad—for I can't help thinking how poor Mother would have loved those extra days with her.

Aunt Jane said I was to have my old room, and so, as soon as I got here, I went right up and took off my hat and coat, and pretty quick they brought up my trunk, and I unpacked it; and I didn't hurry about it, either. I wasn't a bit anxious to get downstairs again to Aunt Jane. Besides, I may as well own up, I was crying—a little. Mother's room was right across the hall, and it looked so lonely, and I couldn't help remembering how different this homecoming was from the one in Boston, six months ago.

Well, at last I had to go down to dinner—I mean supper—and, by the way, I made another break on that. I called it dinner right out loud, and never thought—till I saw Aunt Jane's face.

"Supper will be ready directly," she said, with cold and icy emphasis. "And may I ask you to remember, Mary, please, that Andersonville has dinner at noon, not at six o'clock."

"Yes, Aunt Jane," said Mary, polite and proper as I. (I shan't say what Marie said twice.)

We didn't do anything in the evening but read and go to bed at nine o'clock. I wanted to run over to Carrie Heywood's; but Aunt Jane said no, not till morning. (I wonder why young folks never can do things when they want to do them, but must always wait till morning or night or noon, or some other time!)

In the morning I went up to the schoolhouse. I planned it so as to get there at recess, and I saw all the girls except one that was sick, and one that was away. We had a perfectly lovely time, only everybody was talking all at once so that I don't know now what was said. But they seemed glad to see me. I know that. Maybe I'll go to school next week. Aunt Jane says she thinks I ought to, when it's only the first of May. She's going to speak to Father when he comes next week.

She was going to speak to him about my clothes; then she decided to attend to those herself, and not bother him. She doesn't like my dresses. She came into my room and asked to see my things. My! But didn't I hate to show them to her? Marie said she wouldn't; but Mary obediently trotted to the closet and brought them out one by one.

Aunt Jane turned them around with the tips of her fingers, all the time sighing and shaking her head. When I'd brought them all out, she shook her head again and said they would not do at all—not in Andersonville; that they were extravagant, and much too elaborate for a young girl; that she would see the dressmaker and arrange that I had some serviceable blue and brown serges at once.

Blue and brown serge, indeed! But, there, what's the use? I'm Mary now. I keep forgetting that; though I don't see how I can forget it—with Aunt Jane around.

But, listen. A funny thing happened this morning. Something came up about Boston, and Aunt Jane asked me a question. Then she asked another and another, and she kept me talking till I guess I talked 'most a whole half-hour about Grandpa Desmond, Aunt Hattie, Mother, and the house, and what we did, and, oh, a whole lot of things. And here, just two days ago, she was telling me that she wasn't interested in Grandpa Desmond, his home, or his daughter, or anything that was his!

There's something funny about Aunt Jane.

ONE WEEK LATER.

Father's come. He came yesterday. But I didn't know it, and I came running downstairs, ending with a little bounce for the last step. And there, right in front of me in the hall was—Father.

I guess he was as much surprised as I was. Anyhow, he acted so. He just stood stock-still and stared, his face turning all kinds of colors.

"You?" he gasped, just above his breath. Then suddenly he seemed to remember. "Why, yes, yes, to be sure. You are here, aren't you? How do you do, Mary?"

He came up then and held out his hand, and I thought that was all he was going to do. But, after a funny little hesitation, he stooped and kissed my forehead. Then he turned and went into the library with very quick steps, and I didn't see him again till at the supper-table.

At the supper-table he said again, "How do you do, Mary?" Then he seemed to forget all about me. At least he didn't say anything more to me; for three or four times, when I glanced up, I found him looking at me. But just as soon as I looked back at him he turned his eyes away and cleared his throat, and began to eat or to talk to Aunt Jane.

After dinner—I mean supper—he went out to the observatory, just as he always used to. Aunt Jane said her head ached and she was going to bed. I said I guessed I would step over to Carrie Heywood's; but Aunt Jane said, certainly not; that I was much too young to be running around nights in the dark. Nights! And it was only seven o'clock, and not dark at all! But of course I couldn't go.

Aunt Jane went upstairs, and I was left alone. I didn't feel a bit like reading; besides, there wasn't a book or a magazine anywhere asking you to read. They just shrieked, "Touch me not!" behind the glass doors in the library. I hate sewing. I mean Marie hates it. Aunt Jane says Mary's got to learn.

For a time I just walked around the different rooms downstairs, looking at the chairs and tables and rugs all just so, as if they'd been measured with a yardstick. Marie jerked up a shade and pushed a chair crooked and kicked a rug up at one corner; but Mary put them all back properly—so there wasn't any fun in that for long.

After a while I opened the parlor door and peered in. They used to keep it open when Mother was here; but Aunt Jane doesn't use it. I knew where the electric push button was, though, and I turned on the light.

Before I got the light on, the chairs and sofas loomed up like ghosts in their linen covers. And when the light did come on, I saw that all the old shiver places were there. Not one was missing. Great Grandfather Anderson's coffin plate on black velvet, the wax cross and flowers that had been used at three Anderson funerals, the hair wreath under of all the hair of seven dead Andersons and five live ones—no, no, I don't mean all the hair, but hair from all seventeen and five. Nurse Sarah used to tell me about it.

Well, as I said, all the shiver places were there, and I shivered again as I looked at them; then I crossed over to Mother's old piano, opened it, and touched the keys. I love to play. There wasn't any music there, but I don't need music for lots of my pieces. I know them by heart—only they're all gay and lively, and twinkly-toe dancy. Marie music. I don't know a one that would be proper for Mary to play.

But I was just tingling to play something, and I remembered that Father was in the observatory, and Aunt Jane upstairs in the other part of the house where she couldn't possibly hear. So I began to play. I played the very slowest piece I had, and I played softly at first; but I know I forgot, and I know I hadn't played two pieces before I was having the best time ever, and making all the noise I wanted to.

Then all of a sudden I had a funny feeling as if somebody somewhere was watching me; but I just couldn't turn around. I stopped playing, though, at the end of that piece, and then I looked; but there wasn't anybody in sight. But the wax cross was there, and the coffin plate, and that awful hair wreath; and suddenly I felt as if the room was just full of folks with great staring eyes. I fairly shook with shivers, but I managed to shut the piano and get over to the door where the light was. Then, a minute later, out in the big silent hall, I crept on tiptoe toward the stairs. I knew then, all of a sudden, why I'd felt somebody was listening. There was. Across the hall in the library in the big chair before the fire sat—Father! And for 'most a whole half-hour I had been hanging away at that piano on manches and dance music! My! But I held my breath and stopped short. I can tell you. But he didn't move nor turn, and a minute later I was safely by the door and halfway up the stairs.

I stayed in my room the rest of that evening; and for the second time since I've been here I cried myself to sleep.

ANOTHER WEEK LATER

Well, I've got them—those brown and blue serge dresses and the calf-skin boots. My, but I hope they're stiff and homely enough—all of them! And hot, too. Aunt Jane did say to-day that she didn't know but what she'd made a mistake not to get gingham dresses. But, then, she'd have to get the gingham later, anyway, she said; then I'd have both.

Well, they can't be worse than the serge. That's sure. I hate the serge. They're awfully homely. Still, I don't know but it's just as well. Certainly it's lots easier to be Mary in a brown serge and clumpy boots than it is in the soft, fluffy things Marie used to wear. You couldn't be Marie in these things. Honestly, I'm feeling real Maryish these days.

I wonder if that's why the girls seem so queer at school. They are queer. Three times lately I've come up to a crowd of girls and heard them stop talking right off short. They colored up, too; and pretty quick they began to slip away, one by one, till there wasn't anybody left but just me, just as they used to do in Boston. But of course it can't be for the same reason here, for they've known all along about the divorce and haven't minded it at all.

I heard this morning that Stella Mayhew had a party last night. But I didn't get invited. Of course, you can't always ask everybody to your parties, but this was a real big party, and I haven't found a girl in school, yet, that wasn't invited—but me. But I guess it wasn't anything, after all. Stella is a new girl that has come here to live since I went away. Her folks are rich, and she's very popular, and of course she has loads of friends she had to invite; and she doesn't know me very well. Probably that was it. And maybe I just imagine it about the other girls, too. Perhaps it's the brown serge dress. Still, it can't be that, for this is the first day I've worn it. But, as I said, I feel Maryish already.

I haven't dared to touch the piano since that night a week ago, only once when Aunt Jane was at a missionary meeting, and I knew Father was over to the college. But didn't I have a good time then? I just guess I did!

Aunt Jane doesn't care for music. Besides, it's noisy, she says, and would be likely to disturb Father. So I'm not to keep on with my music lessons here. She's going to teach me to sew instead. She says sewing is much more sensible and useful.

Sensible and useful! I wonder how many times I've heard those words since I've been here. And durable, too. And nourishing. That's another word. Honestly, Marie is getting awfully tired of Mary's sensible sewing and dusting, and her durable clumpy shoes and stuffy dresses, and her nourishing oatmeal and whole-wheat bread. But there, what can you do? I'm trying to remember that it's different, anyway, and that I said I liked something different.

I don't see much of Father. Still, there's something kind of queer about it, after all. He only speaks to me about twice a day—just "Good-morning, Mary," and "Good-night." And so far as most of his actions are concerned you wouldn't think by them that he knew I was in the house. Yet, over and over again at the table, and at times when I didn't even know he was 'round, I've found him watching me, and with such a queer, funny look in his eyes. Then, very quickly always, he looks right away.

But last night he didn't. And that's especially what I wanted to write about today. And this is the way it happened:

It was after supper, and I had gone into the library. Father had gone out to the observatory as usual, and Aunt Jane had gone upstairs to her room as usual, and as usual I was wandering 'round looking for something to do. I wanted to play on the piano, but I didn't dare to—not with all those dead-hair and wax-flower folks in the parlor watching me, and the chance of Father's coming in as he did before.

I was standing in the window staring out at nothing—it wasn't quite dark yet—when again I had that queer feeling that somebody was looking at me. I turned—and there was Father. He had come in and was sitting in the big chair by the table. But this time he didn't look right away as usual and give me a chance to slip quietly out of the room, as I always had before. Instead he said:

"What are you doing there, Mary?" "Nothing!" Father frowned and hitched in his chair. Father always hitches in his chair when he's irritated and nervous. "You can't be doing nothing. Nobody but a dead man does nothing—and we aren't so sure about him. What are you doing, Mary?" "Just looking out the window."

"Come here. I want to talk to you."

"Yes, Father."

I went, of course, at once, and sat down in the chair near him. He hitched again in his seat.

"Why don't you do something—read, sew, knit?" he demanded. "Why do I always find you moping around, doing nothing?" Just like that he said it; and when he had just told me—

"Why, Father!" I cried; and I know that I showed how surprised I was "I thought you just said I couldn't do nothing—that nobody could!"

"Oh? What! Tut, tut!" He seemed very angry at first; then suddenly he looked sharply into my face. Next, if you'll believe it, he laughed—the queer little chuckle under his breath that I've heard him give two or three times when there was something he thought was funny. "Humph!" he grunted. Then he gave me another sharp look out of his eyes, and said:

"I don't think you meant that to be quite so impertinent as it sounded, Mary, so we'll let it pass—this time I'll put my question this way: Don't you ever knit or read or sew?"

"I do sew every day in Aunt Jane's room, ten minutes hemming, ten minutes sewing, and ten minutes basting patchwork squares together. I don't know how to knit."

"How about reading? Don't you care for reading?"

"Why, of course I do. I love it!"

"And I do read lots—at home."

"At—home?"

I knew, then, of course, that I'd made another awful break. There wasn't any smile around Father's eyes now, and his lips came together hard and thin over that last word.

"At—at my home," I stammered. "I mean, my other home."

"Humph!" grunted Father. Then, after a minute: "But why, pray, can't you read here? I'm sure there are—books enough." He flourished his hands toward the bookcases all around the room.

"Oh, I do—a little; but, you see, I'm so afraid I'll leave some of them out when I'm through," I explained.

"Well, what of it? What if you do?" he demanded.

"Why, Father!" I tried to show by the way I said it that he knew—of course he knew. But he made me tell him right out that Aunt Jane wouldn't like it, and that the books always had to be kept exactly where they belonged.

"Well, w' not? Why shouldn't they? Aren't books down there—in Boston—kept where they belong, pray?"

It was the first time since I'd come that he'd ever mentioned Boston; and I almost jumped out of my chair when I heard him. But I soon saw it wasn't going to be the last, for right then and there he began to question me, even worse than Aunt Jane had.

He wanted to know everything, everything; all about the house, with its cushions and cozy corners and curtains 'way up, and books left around easy to get, and magazines, and Ruby Lester, and the fun we had romping with him, and everything. Only, of course, I didn't mention Mother. Aunt Jane had told me not to—not anywhere; and to be specially careful before Father. But what can you do

LESSON FOR JULY 23

DANIEL IN THE DEN OF LIONS

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 6:1-23.
GOLDEN TEXT—Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of Hons.—Heb. 11:33.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Jer. 38; Dan. 3; Acts 12:1-19; 23:12-35; Heb. 11:32-40.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God Takes Care of Daniel.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Daniel in the Den of Lions.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Daniel's Heroic Faith.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Trials and Triumphs of Faith.

I. Daniel the Prime Minister of the Medo-Persian Empire (vv. 1-13).

Sterling worth brought him to the front and kept him there. The new king was keen to discern his worth and to give it recognition.

II. An Occasion Sought Against Daniel (vv. 4-9).

11. The reason for (v. 4). No doubt that which prompted this effort was their envy and jealousy. The presence of envy always shows inferiority. It is hard for the human heart to forgive those who excel.

2. Failure of (v. 4). Daniel's official record was blameless. They could not even find an error. Envy is still in the world. Those who excel in any line are sure to suffer in some way for their excellencies.

3. The wicked plot (vv. 5-9). They trumped up a charge on the ground of his foreign religion. They were not careful about their method, just so their end was attained. When surrounded by such hatred only the fear of God can save. Everyone needs that help daily. In spite of Daniel's loyalty the decree was signed by the king which would put him into the den of lions.

III. Daniel's Noble Confession (vv. 10-13).

Though Daniel knew that the wicked decree was signed he knelt before God as usual. Note the silence of heroism. Weak men bluster; strong men have little to say.

1. He continued his usual habit (v. 10). Regular habitual prayer is essential to right life. Habit has an important bearing upon life and especially upon our religious life. He knew that the civil law had absolutely nothing to do with his religion. God's law is first. When the laws of earth conflict with God's laws there is but one thing to do. Laws forbidding to read the Bible, to pray, or to meet to worship God, have no authority over men.

2. Daniel reported to the king (vv. 11-13). These wicked men watched to find out as to whether Daniel would pray before his God, and when they found that he continued his worship of the true God they went to the king and reported that Daniel disregarded his decree.

IV. The Foolish Decree Executed (vv. 14-17).

1. The king displeased with himself (v. 14). He labored till the going down of the sun to deliver Daniel. He was conscious that he had been entrapped.

2. The king helpless (v. 15). The proud ruler found that he was a slave.

3. Daniel cast into the den of lions (v. 16). The king's parting word to Daniel was a poor, feeble excuse for his guilty conscience.

4. The Double Seal (v. 17). This double act shows that one rascal will not trust another.

V. Daniel Delivered (vv. 18-23).

1. Note the contrast between the night spent in the lion's den and the one in the palace. In the palace there was no sleep, no mirth. Daniel's quiet is as a picture of the safety and peace which are the portion of those who trust God and do His will.

2. The king's question in the morning (v. 20).

3. Daniel's answer (v. 22). God's angel has done many wonderful works. The early Christians despised bonds, stripes and death.

4. Daniel delivered (v. 23). No manner of hurt was found because he believed in his God.

VI. The Doom of His Accusers (v. 24).

They were cast into the den of lions and before they even came to the bottom of the den their bones were broken in pieces. This is an example of retributive justice. Daniel's enemies go into the same trap which they prepared for him.

VII. Darius' Decree (vv. 25-27).

Men were to tremble and fear before Daniel's God. As to whether Darius had a change of heart we do not know.

VIII. Daniel's Prosperity (v. 28).

Daniel goes higher into the kingdom and continues in his place of honor even though dynasties change.

ARE YOU NERVOUS?

Maybe There is a Cause For It That You Can Correct.

Many who have suffered from backaches and weak kidneys are naturally irritable, fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves," but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and uric acid irritates the nerves, keeping one "on edge," and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, the medicine so well recommended by Bedford residents.

Mrs. Martha Davidson, W Penn St., gave the following statement October 14, 1907: "I was in poor health for some time and finally found it was caused by disordered kidneys. I was nervous and suffered with severe headaches and my back ached constantly. Seeing Doan's Kidney Pills highly advertised I decided to give them a trial. In every place. Read this Bedford resident's statement and gave me prompt relief."

On February 10, 1919, Mrs. Davidson said: "I haven't used Doan's since I last recommended them. I am glad to confirm my former statement."

KEEPS ALWAYS ACTIVE

It is known that every particle of the earth is in a state of constant activity. Nature abhors stagnation. It abhors vacuum. Even the stagnant, smelly pool of water generates myriad forms of life. Every particle of what we call a stone has a history that is ever changing. No matter how infinitesimal the molecules of the combined elements, our sphere not one is in the same place today that it knew yesterday. Every hour, every moment, everything changes.

Nuts and Sirup in Candy.

It is a fact of common knowledge that nuts are very high in food value, those of a pure, fatty in nature, containing caloric energy being almost entirely fat. Nuts, pecans, peanuts and walnuts, average 1,500 to 2,500 calories per pound. Candy, especially called "nut candy," is largely of nut material. It is a pure, whole-staple candy, as a pure whole-staple candy, as the name indicates, from corn.

"Hypocrisy."

Nothing is more unjust than to common, than to charge with hypocrisy him that expresses zeal for virtues which he neglects to practice since he may be sincerely convinced of the advantage of conquering vices as a man may be confident of the advantage of a voyage or a journey, without having courage or industry to undertake it and may earnestly recommend to others those temptations which he neglects to master.
